Annual gross revenue. Based on trailing 12-month AirROI performance of 6 comparable properties. AirROI measures occupancy over the full 365-day year.

Why occupancy reads low: AirROI occupancy is nights booked divided by all 365 days of the year. Several of these homes are only open to guests part of the year; measured against the nights they were open, the comps booked 14% to 66%. In AirROI's data for this area, higher nightly rates come with lower occupancy: 15 of the 67 active lake homes in the search (4-7 bedrooms, sleeps 7-13, 30+ nights booked) booked 40% or more of the year, and all of them averaged $780 a night or less. None of the homes at $1,000+ a night booked more than 32% of the year. AirROI's location estimate for a typical 4-bedroom home here is 43% occupancy at $585 a night, about the same annual revenue reached a different way.

How the base case is derived: We combine two independent AirROI methods: the median trailing-12-month revenue of the 6 comparable listings ($85,506) and AirROI's revenue estimate for a 4-bedroom, 4.5-bath, 10-guest home at this location ($90,992). The base case is the average of the two: $88,249. The two methods are 6.0% apart.

Compared with the current summer rate card: 81 Timberlane's published 16-week summer schedule totals $228,000 if every week sells. That works out to $2,036 per night across 112 nights. The rate card is $139,751 above the full-year comp-based base case. Based on the comp set's monthly AirROI revenue, 85% of annual revenue falls in Jun–Sep, about $74,594 of the base case. The rate card's nightly equivalent is 1.4x the base-case ADR ($1,483). Why the two differ: the rate card is an asking price that assumes 100% of summer weeks sell. The comps are what Airbnb listings actually earned over the last 12 months, including their unbooked nights. Weekly agency rentals like this one are not in AirROI's Airbnb data, so the comps may not reflect this property's own booking history. Use the rate card as the summer ceiling and the comp-based numbers as the year-round, nightly-rental view.

PERFORMANCE ANALYTICS

Seasonal Performance Patterns

Peak season (May–Oct)

These months average 37% occupancy across the comp set. This is the strongest demand window and carries the highest nightly rates of the year.

Shoulder season (Nov–Apr)

These months average 1% occupancy across the comp set. Most of these homes took few or no Airbnb bookings in these months, so revenue is concentrated in summer.

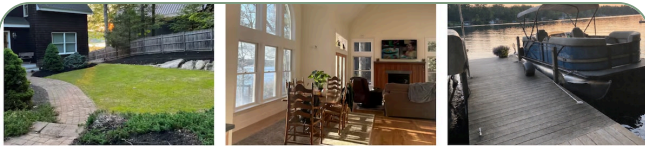

Average of AirROI's monthly occupancy for 6 comparable listings over the last 12 months.

MARKET COMPARABLES

Comparable Properties: AirROI Performance

Trailing 12-month performance reported by AirROI. Blank fields were not returned by AirROI and have not been estimated.

Larger homes included: 5 of 6 comps have more bedrooms than 81 Timberlane (4 BR). They are labeled on their cards. Larger homes can command higher nightly rates, so read them as the top of the range rather than a like-for-like match.

METHODOLOGY

Assumptions & Methodology

Comp selection

- 4-7 bedrooms (subject has 4; larger homes are labeled), sleeps 7-13 (subject sleeps 10, plus or minus 3), waterfront, lake access or boat slip, rated 4.8+
- AirROI radius search within 12 miles of the subject, entire homes only
- Must list waterfront, lake access or a boat slip in AirROI's amenity data
- Must have AirROI trailing-12-month revenue
- At least 3 reviews, rated 4.8+
- At least 30 nights booked in the last 12 months (an established, active listing)
- Ranked by AirROI trailing-12-month average nightly rate, highest first, to represent the premium tier

Scenario math

- Conservative: 25th percentile of comp annual revenue
- Base: average of the comp median and AirROI's location estimate
- Optimistic: the highest of the comp 75th percentile, AirROI's 75th-percentile estimate and the base case
- Occupancy shown is the matching comp percentile. AirROI measures occupancy over the full year, so $ADR = \text{revenue} \div (\text{occupancy} \times 365 \text{ nights})$

Data sources

- AirROI /listings/search/radius, /listings/metrics/all and /calculator/estimate: comp revenue, occupancy, ADR, availability, monthly performance and AirROI's location estimate
- Published rate card: Published 2027 weekly rates, Yankee Pedlar (winnire.com)
